Experience Makes the Difference!

People walk through fire and rubble Monday in the market area in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. AP

DEATH TOLL RISES

Associated Press

The staggering scope of Haiti's nightmare came into sharper focus Monday as authorities estimated 200,000 dead and 1.5 million homeless in the heart of this luckless land, where injured survivors still died in the streets, doctors pleaded for help and looters slashed at one another in the rubble.

The world pledged more money, food, medicine and police. Some 2,000 U.S. Marines steamed into nearby waters. And ex-president Bill Clinton, special U.N. envoy, flew in to offer support.

But hour by hour the unmet needs of hundreds of thousands grew.

"Have we been abandoned? Where is the food?" shouted one man, Jean Michel Jeantet, in a downtown street.

The U.N. World Food Program said it expected to boost operations from feeding 67,000 people Sunday to 97,000 on Monday. But it needs 100 million prepared meals over the next 30 days, and it appealed for more

Wyclef Jean defends charity

Haitian-born musician Wyclef Jean defended his charity Monday in the wake of questions about its practices while calling on the international community to enable the evacuation of his homeland's earthquake-ravaged capital. The Wyclef Jean Foundation Inc. has drawn fire in recent days as groups that vet charities raised doubts about its accounting practices. "Did I ever use Yele money for personal benefit? Absolutely not," he said.

government donations.

"I know that aid cannot come soon enough," U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said in New York after returning from Haiti.

"Unplug the bottlenecks," he urged.

In one step to reassure frustrated aid groups, the U.S. military agreed to give aid deliveries priority over military flights at the now-U.S.-run airport here, the WFP announced in Rome. The Americans' handling of civilian flights had angered some humanitarian officials.

Sunday's looting and violence raged into Monday, as hundreds clambered over the broken walls of shops to grab anything they could—including toothpaste, now valuable for lining nostrils against the stench of Port-au-Prince's dead. Police fired into the air as young men fought each other over rum and beer with broken bottles and machetes.

The latest casualty report, from the European Commission citing Haitian government figures, doubled previous estimates of the dead from the magnitude-7.0 quake, to approximately 200,000, with some 70,000 bodies recovered and trucked off to mass graves. If accurate, that would make Haiti's catastrophe about as deadly as the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami, which killed an estimated 230,000 people in a dozen countries.

Obesity test urged for kids

Associated Press

An influential advisory panel says school-age youngsters and teens should be screened for obesity and sent to intensive behavior treatment if they need to lose weight—a move that could transform how doctors deal with overweight children.

Treating obese kids can help them lose weight, the panel of doctors said in issuing new guidelines Monday. But that's only if it involves rigorous diet, activity and behavior counseling.

Just five years ago, the same panel—the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force—found few benefits from pediatric obesity programs. Since then, the task force said, studies have shown success. But that has come only with treatment that is costly, hard to find and hard to follow.

The good news is, "you don't have to throw your arms up and say you can't do anything," said task force chairman Dr. Ned Calonge. "This is a recommendation that says there are things that work."

Calonge said the panel recognizes most pediatricians are not equipped to offer the necessary kind of treatment, and that it may be hard to find, or afford, places that do. The recommendations merely highlight scientific evidence showing what type of programs work—"not whether or not those services are currently available," he said.

The new advice, published online in the journal Pediatrics, could serve as a template for creating obesity programs. It also might remove one important cost barrier: Calonge said insurers will no longer be able to argue that they won't provide coverage because treatment programs don't work.

Evidence the panel evaluated shows intensive treatment can help children lose several pounds—enough for obese kids to drop into the "overweight" category, making them less prone to diabetes and other health problems. The treatment requires appointments at least once or twice a week for six months or more.

The recommendations follow government reports last week that showed obesity rates in kids and adults have held steady for about five years.

Woops! City calendar missing Jan. 31

North Dakota residents and others relying on a new calendar issued by the city of Grand Forks will get a jump-start on February.

The recently issued City of Grand Forks 2010 Calendar is missing Sunday, Jan. 31.

City spokesman John Bernstrom says the error was noticed when boxes of the calendar printed by Fine Print of Grand Forks were opened before Christmas.

Bernstrom says if Jan. 31 had been a weekday in which there was garbage or recycling collection, the city would have issued a correction or public statement. Feb. 1 appears on the calendar as a Monday so the rest of the year is correct.

Fine Print President Kevin Kuntz says January is the coldest month of the year and having one fewer day works for him. AP

Bus, rail cutbacks will test patience

If you ride the CTA, chances are you will have to wait longer for a bus or train starting Feb. 7.

The CTA last week released its detailed list of service cuts, which take effect next month as part of a CTA plan to plug its $300 million budget hole.

Nine express bus routes will be eliminated, and 41 bus routes will see their start and/or end times change and get less frequent service. An additional 78 bus routes will see less frequent service.

Nearly two dozen bus routes, typically special events routes and buses that serve the University of Chicago, won't see a change, according to the most recent CTA list.

On the rails, all rail lines except the Yellow Line, which travels between Skokie and the Howard station in Rogers Park, will see less frequent service.

» The Blue Line was most affected by the service cuts. Service on the Blue Line will operate less frequently in the early morning, mid-morning, midday, early evening, evening and overnight hours on weekdays. For example, riders typically see weeknight trains every 10 minutes. Starting Feb. 7, evening trains will run every 12 minutes.

» Red Line and Orange Line riders will see longer wait times in the early morning, midday and evening hours on weekdays. Red Line trains typically arrive every seven to eight minutes in the early afternoon on weekdays. Starting Feb. 7, trains will arrive every eight to nine minutes. Orange Line riders usually see trains arrive every 10 minutes on weekday afternoons. Trains will arrive every 10-12 minutes when service cuts take effect.

» Green Line riders will see less frequent service in the morning rush period, midday and evening hours on weekdays. Riders who pick up the train at Garfield during morning rush hour see trains every eight to nine minutes. Service will operate every eight to 10 minutes next month.

» Purple Line riders will see longer wait times in the midday and evening hours on weekdays. Trains on weeknights typically run every 12 minutes. Evening service soon will operate 10-15 minutes.

» Pink Line riders will see longer wait times in the morning and afternoon rush periods, late morning, midday and in the evening on weekdays. Evening trains typically arrive every 10 minutes and soon will arrive every 12 minutes.

» Brown Line riders will see less frequent service in the early and late morning, midday, afternoon rush period and evening on weekdays. Afternoon riders typically see Brown Line trains every four to five minutes. This service will operate every four to 7 1/2 minutes starting Feb. 7.

Up, up and away

Commander in chief has spent little time in Chicago in the past year

Chicago Tribune

What a difference a year makes.

After he was elected, President Obama told the Tribune that he hoped to return to Chicago every couple of months and considered the South Side his “Kennebunkport,” an allusion to the Maine family compound of President George H.W. Bush.

Shortly after the inauguration last January, the Obama family returned to their Kenwood home for a long Valentine’s weekend. The family hasn’t been back since, though the president returned to Chicago in June to speak at a medical conference and in July for a political fundraiser. On neither occasion did he stay the night.

“He’s president of the United States, not mayor of Chicago,” said Peter Flemister, a retired attorney, at a diner in Hyde Park. “He’s got a financial crisis, wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, health care. I’d rather he stay in Washington and take care of them than be focusing on here.”

It seems that even with a taxpayer-covered jet and security entourage at their disposal, the nation’s first parents have discovered how hard it can be to juggle family getaways with the busy social and school calendars of their young children.

Last week, in the middle of a long and delicate negotiating session with congressional leaders over health care reform, Obama suddenly announced he was taking a break for a few hours. “He stood up and said, ‘I’m out of here,’” Durbin recalled. “‘Malia is having a flute recital, and I’m going to be there.’”

To be sure, there is an upside in Chicago to having Obama stay away. Presidential motorcades often create monumental traffic tie-ups. The security cordon around the Obama home for that Valentine’s weekend visit extended for a three-block radius.

Jack Cella, general manager of the Seminary Co-op Bookstores around the University of Chicago campus where Obama once taught law, said that for much of 2009 the neighborhood was crawling with reporters from around the world, as well as tourists and curiosity seekers. That activity has slowed in the winter months, and it’s not clear if it will resume with warmer weather.

Not long ago, it was common to see the Obamas wandering the neighborhood, but residents are by no means put out about them now staying away, Cella said.

“We’ve still got as much enthusiasm as ever,” he said. “There is still real admiration and affection for the first family. It would be nice to see him, but people realize he’s got an awful lot to do.”

Chicagoans may consider themselves an unsentimental, nose-to-the-grindstone lot, but folks here were swept up in a wave of euphoria with Obama’s election. The huge election-night rally in Grant Park was electric with pos-

Mr. Obama goes to Washington

Chicago Tribune

Obama took an array of influential Chicagoans with him to Washington, and U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) said that has made it far easier for him to gain an ear for Illinois concerns at the highest levels of the White House. A recent example, Durbin explained, is the intense attention that federal officials have paid to the issue of keeping invasive Asian carp out of Lake Michigan.

If anything qualifies as Obama-inspired local pork, it could be the administration's decision to buy the empty Thomson prison in northwestern Illinois as a holding tank for terror suspects now detained at Guantanamo Bay. Obama likely was aware of the prison's availability because he was a member of the Illinois Senate in 2002 when state officials, in a cost-cutting move, decided not to open the just-completed facility.

Beyond Thomson, however, there is little evidence Obama so far is rewarding his home state with an extra dollop of federal spending, as Washington leaders often have done. (Lyndon Johnson, of Texas, for example, was in his first year as vice president when Houston was picked to be home to NASA.)

Illinois, to be sure, has received a healthy share of Obama's showcase federal stimulus spending pot.

But the $10.7 billion to date earmarked for Illinois is not a windfall when compared with other states. Illinois, the fifth-largest state, is in line for the fifth-largest amount of funding, according to ProPublica, an independent, nonprofit investigative journalism program that has closely monitored the stimulus program.

Durbin

STATE OF THE UNION

President Obama will deliver his first State of the Union address Jan. 27.

Obama will address a joint session of Congress, beginning at 8 p.m.

White House press secretary Robert Gibbs says the speech will be broadcast live on national TV and streamed on the White House Web site. It will be Obama's first State of the Union address.

The speech Obama delivered last year, just weeks after taking office, technically is not considered a State of the Union address.

WINDY CITY BLAME GAME

As the nation marks the anniversary of the first Chicago president's inauguration, consider this:

ROD BLAGO

»The city has, indeed, gained global renown as the home of Obama, but it's also become known far and wide over the last year as the home of ousted Gov. Rod Blagojevich.

RED INK

»Obama's political magic hasn't kept the state from suffering through a recession like everybody else, and the state and city governments are drowning in red ink.

OLYMPIC BUST

»Chicago's high-profile bid for the 2016 Olympics went down in flames despite Obama's personal intervention.

ROLAND BURRIS

»To some, the scandal-marred transfer of Obama's U.S. Senate seat to Roland Burris may be the most lopsided Chicago trade since Lou Brock for Ernie Broglio.

sibilities, not the least of which was the notion that Chicago would be transformed into the nation's unofficial second capital and reap a big payoff in both stature and dollars. Springfield has built a thriving tourist industry around Abraham Lincoln. Tiny Crawford, Texas, got a huge economic shot in the arm whenever President George W. Bush showed up at his Prairie Chapel Ranch for a stay with an entourage of aides, security, media and onlookers.

But Chicago is a far cry from Crawford; Plains, Ga., (Jimmy Carter); or even Little Rock, Ark., (Bill Clinton). Sizing up what it means for a modern president to hail from an already bustling commercial and cultural center is a more challenging task.

"At the very least, it will become part of the keepsake box of the city, like having Oprah in town or being home to the 1893 World's Fair," said Chris Mooney, a political scientist at the University of Illinois' Springfield campus. "Every big city needs to be noticed now and then. Even if you're already the prom queen, it's nice to be complimented."

Fans of Conan O'Brien rally in Pioneer Court on Monday to support the late-night television host. PHIL VELASQUEZ/TRIBUNE PHOTO

Conan supporters rally 'round the redhead

By Christina Salter

REDEYE

Members of Team Coco brought a piece of the late-night TV battle to the streets of Chicago on Monday.

Fans of Conan O'Brien gathered at Pioneer Court near the NBC building to show their support for the "Tonight Show" host, who soon may be leaving his post to make room for Jay Leno. The latest reports Monday indicated O'Brien was close with NBC on a deal to leave the network after refusing to host "Tonight" in a later time slot.

Dozens of supporters, who showed up about 4:30 p.m., made it clear whom they blame for Conan's departure—Leno. "No Big Chin" read the sign carried by Bobby Ramos, 18, of Palos Hills, Ill. Ramos attended the rally with several friends, passing around a can of temporary orange hair dye to simulate O'Brien's trademark red hair.

Attendees said they found out about the event via groups on Facebook. The "I'm With Coco" fan page showed events planned for Monday at NBC buildings in L.A., New York and Seattle. It had 348,000 fans as of Monday night.

"I'm not a political person, but I figured this would be a good opportunity to go to a rally I actually care about," said Ben Zurawski, 26, of Edgewater.

Other Chicagoans said they're for Conan, even if they didn't make Monday's rally.

Nicole Halm, 25, said she is a lifelong member of Team Coco. The McKinley Park resident had the chance to meet Conan through the Make-a-Wish Foundation in 2001, when she was on the waiting list for a liver transplant.

"I know that he's genuine," Halm said. "He was so down to earth when I met him. I would hate to see him off the air."

Leno, meanwhile, made a lengthy and serious statement after his monologue Monday night. "It looks like we might be back at 11:30; I'm not sure. I don't know," he said. "But through all of this ... Conan O'Brien has been a gentleman. He's a good guy ... This is all business. If you don't get the ratings, they take you off the air." He also made a somewhat cryptic reference to possibly having "an answer for you tomorrow."

Police say pit bulls killed man in his home

Chicago Tribune

Police are investigating the death of a 56-year-old Far South Side man whose daughter came home Sunday night to find him covered in blood and apparently killed by the pit bulls she was raising, police sources said.

Johnny Wilson was found in the living room of his home in the 10200 block of South Aberdeen Street with numerous bite marks on his body, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office. Other sources said he suffered massive head, chest and upper body trauma.

The medical examiner's office ruled following an autopsy Monday that Wilson died of hemorrhaging from multiple injuries from a dog attack. The examiner concluded Wilson's death was accidental.

Four pit bulls and two puppies in the home were turned over to Chicago Animal Care and Control.

A longtime neighbor at whose house the daughter and her family stayed Sunday night said he thought the attack was out of character for the dogs; he has found them to be friendly in the past. Another neighbor also said Wilson never appeared to have had any trouble with the dogs.

26-year-old found on Eisenhower

The body of a 26-year-old man was found Monday morning in the outbound lanes of the Eisenhower Expressway, officials said.

About 7 a.m., a call came in from a CTA employee reporting the body in an outbound lane on Interstate 290 between Kostner and Laramie avenues, according to a spokesman from the Illinois State Police.

Police said the man apparently jumped to his death from the Kostner Avenue overpass. All outbound lanes were closed between Damen and Kostner avenues while police investigated the scene but were reopened about 9 a.m.

The man lived on the 1400 block of East Marquette Road, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office.

Obama remembers CLTV's Gomez

Tributes celebrating the life of CLTV political reporter Carlos Hernandez Gomez spanned the White House to the statehouse in Springfield today, a day after his death at age 36 following a more than yearlong battle with cancer.

"I was saddened to hear of the passing of Carlos Hernandez Gomez. Our paths first crossed when I was a state senator. He was a throwback in the style of Chicago's storied political reporters," President Barack Obama said in a statement.

"He loved Chicago, and he relentlessly sought to tell its story with the commitment to truth and the insatiable curiosity that any good reporter has to have."

Religious riots

3 Angry Muslim youths set a church filled with worshippers ablaze in Jos, Nigeria, starting a riot that killed at least 27 people and wounded more than 300 others in the latest religious violence in the region, officials said Monday.

Life sentence for plotter

4 A Canadian judge on Monday sentenced the ringleader of a homegrown terrorist plot to set off truck bombs in Ontario to life in prison.

Americans allege torture

5 Five Americans arrested in Pakistan on suspicion of terrorism told a court Monday that they had been tortured by police—charges that could add to political sensitivities surrounding the case.

Tobacco must spill secrets

In June, tobacco companies must tell the Food and Drug Administration their formulas for the first time, just as drugmakers have for decades. Manufacturers also will have to turn over any studies they've done on the effects of the ingredients.

THE DIGIT
14 years

Malawi's government said Monday it is unmoved by international criticism of the trial of a gay couple charged with unnatural acts and gross indecency, felonies for which they could be imprisoned for up to 14 years. Malawi's Information Minister, Leckford Mwanza Thoto, made no apology for the laws that criminalize homosexual acts.

King's message echoes

Worshippers were urged Monday not to “sanitize” the legacy of Martin Luther King Jr. at the Atlanta church where he preached, while others were going to march in Alabama and President Obama honored King by serving meals to the needy.

Princeton University scholar Cornel West delivered a passionate keynote address at Ebenezer Baptist Church to commemorate King's 81st birthday and mark the 25th federal observance of the holiday. He told the crowd to remember King's call to help others and not simply enshrine his legacy in “some distant museum.”

King should be remembered as a vital person whose powerful message was once even considered dangerous by the FBI, West told those gathered at the church where King preached from 1960 until his assassination in 1968.

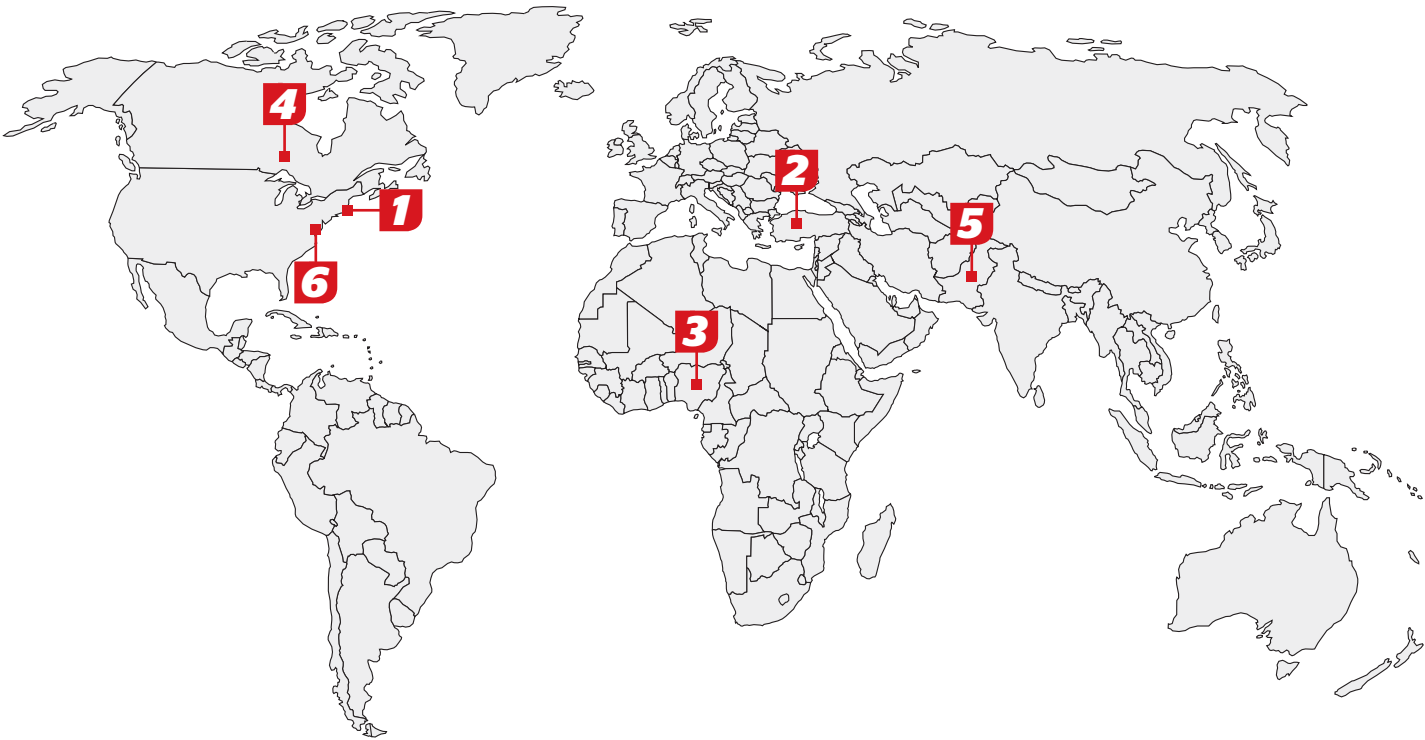

“I don't want to sanitize Martin Luther King Jr.,” West said.

In Washington, D.C., Obama honored King's legacy by serving lunch at a social services organization. Later Monday, Obama discussed the civil rights movement with a group of black elders and their grandchildren and spoke at a King Day concert at the Kennedy Center.

Marches and parades were taking place around the country, including one in Montgomery, Ala., where King gained renown leading a bus boycott in protest of segregation during the 1950s.

Justice Department denies cover-up

6 WASHINGTON Three Guantanamo Bay detainees whose deaths were ruled a suicide in 2006 apparently had been transported from their cells hours before their deaths to a secret site on the island, an article in Harper's magazine asserts.

The published account released Monday raises serious questions about whether the three detainees actually died by hanging themselves in their cells and suggests the U.S. government is covering up details of what precisely happened in the hours before the deaths on the night of June 9, 2006.

In response to the magazine article, the Justice Department said Monday that it had thoroughly reviewed the allegations and found no evidence of wrongdoing.

Harper's reported that the deaths of the three detainees, or the events that led directly to their deaths, most likely occurred at a previously undisclosed facility a mile or so from the main Guantanamo Bay prison complex.

Harper's based much of its account on interviews with several prison guards who said they knew of the existence of the “black” site.

DYE TIME

Would you like to see Jermaine Dye play for the Cubs?
Text "dye" followed by the number of your answer to 87708.

1. Yes 2. No 3. Who?

KNEE-JERK REACTION

Just like the rest of the world, when RedEye staffers hear the news, we have our opinions—serious or not-so-serious. Here is some of the reaction to the reports that Jermaine Dye and the Cubs are talking about joining forces.

Brian Moore

twitter.com/redeyesports

Cubs fans, no need to cheer if this happens. Sox fans, don't cry over Dye. He's not a difference-maker anymore. He does, however, represent something the Cubs haven't had in a long, long time: A World Series title.

Soxman

redeyesports@tribune.com

Holy requiem for a 2005 World Series MVP, Sox fans! Should we feel blue or see red? Should Cubs fans expect a Brett Favre-like comeback? Nope. Think revenge—for the Sox signing Ron Santo in 1974. It could be worse. Dye's not a Twinkie ... yet.

Bag Boy

redeyesports@tribune.com

I'm surprised the Cubs didn't jump on this option sooner. It is so Cubs. Get a good player and sign him up—about five years past his prime.

Dye

To Dye for

If White Sox outfielder signs with Cubs, he certainly wouldn't be the first to play on both sides of town

RedEye

Jermaine Dye in a Cubs uniform? If the reports are accurate, the free-agent White Sox outfielder has had talks with the Cubs about becoming the team's backup outfielder.

The move could shock some—especially die-hards—but Chicago major leaguers frequently play on both sides of town. It's rarer, however, to make the move from one side of town to the other in successive seasons, as Dye might.

Here's a look at some of the more recent Cubs-Sox two-timers.

Neal Cotts

Cotts is another unique crosstown. He's played his entire career so far in Chicago. This year, however, he'll be pitching in Pittsburgh.

Played for Cubs: 2006-2009

Played for Sox: 2003-2006

Aaron Miles

Cubs fans might want to forget Miles, who was a big disappointment—five RBIs, .185 average—among many disappointments last season.

Played for Cubs: 2009

Played for White Sox: 2003

Sammy Sosa

Slammin' Sammy was a skinny, fresh-faced unknown when he was traded from the Sox to the Cubs in 1992.

Played for Cubs: 1992-2004

Played for Sox: 1989-1991

Juan Pierre

JP had a front-row seat for the Cubs' postseason debacle in 2003—as a winning Florida Marlin, that is.

Played for Cubs: 2006

Played for Sox: The Sox traded for Pierre in the offseason. SOURCE: MLB.COM

I've been writing these columns for a whole six months now, and because I haven't been fired, I daresay I feel comfortable doing a reader mailbag-type of column. I can't actually call this a "reader mailbag," because then I would have to start paying Bill Simmons royalties, so I've decided to go with the ever-more-menacing Inbox Apocalypse. You can take part by sending e-mails to redeyesports@tribune.com or visiting chicagonow.com/alexquigley.

What happened to your jumping on the Hawks bandwagon? Haven't seen you post anything hockey-related for two weeks. —Southside Johnny Oh, I'm definitely still on it, John. It's just that the NFL is still the biggest league in the country, and the postseason's huge. Through the magic of my dual-tuner TiVo, I got to watch Sunday's Hawks-Wings game concurrently with the Cowboys-Vikes yawner. This was great because 1) I felt like I was time-traveling, 2) instead of Joe Buck's voice, I heard "boo-BUP, bah-BOOP" and 3) that was one hell of an exciting game and a satisfying shootout winner by Patrick Sharp. There's just something about the Red Wings that make them seem so ... evil. Maybe it's the red uni reminding me of the CCCP in the 1980 Olympics. (True story: I've watched 12 Hawks games this year. They have won all 12. I should save some of the magic for the playoffs.)

Why can't kickers make field goals against the Jets? —Mark, Berwyn

After reviewing game tape of Shayne Graham's two misses and Nate Kaeding's three honks, the trajectories of the balls suggest they are gravitationally affected by Rex Ryan's gut.

What do you think of Geo Soto's dramatic weight loss? Total roider or what? —Andrew, Lincolnshire

If Soto's marijuana use was a "one-time thing" as he said in June, that's a much more plausible reason. Drinking and recreational drugs can be a pretty major source of weight gain. Remember LenDale White's "no more tequila" diet? Dropped 30 pounds doing nothing else different.

WHO ARE YOU WORKING FOR!?!?

—Jack B., New York City

1 How could the Blackhawks' road trip get even better?	They could take me with them.	The Red Wings could follow the Hawks to each city, then get beaten in. So yeah.	Jazz hands. Jazz hands make everything better!	They get a bye through the Olympic break, then just slide into the Finals! It's too easy.	They swing by Buffalo and Patrick Kane's folks buy the team postgame Capri Suns.
2 Why is Ottawa's hockey team nicknamed the Senators?	Because they're frickin' golden.	Ottawa is the capital of Canada, don'tcha know dere?	To try to tap into that fountain of success that is Washington baseball.	Because presidents just hang around the White House like jilted lovers. Like Bush and Clinton this weekend.	Because it's the capital of Canada. Oh, you wanted a clever reason?
3 Golden State is to California sports as DePaul is to Little League sports.	... Carson Daly is to late-night TV. Been there for a while, but no one seems to care.	... Alex Quigley is to blogging.	... golf is without Tiger. A non-factor.	... the Clippers are to, well, California sports.
4 What are the chances Northwestern makes the NCAA tournament?	Gotta say 60-40. If they get to 20 wins, they have to get in.	As good as the most accurate kicker in NFL history making at least one of three kicks. Uh-oh.	What are the chances that I care?	Same as most Big Ten teams, it's a numbers game. Here kitty, kitty, kitty!	Well, if we're extrapolating from historical statistics, zero.
5 What's San Diego kicker Nate Kaeding up to today?	Lunching with Scott Norwood.	Same thing I am: Checking out the want ads.	Undoubtedly finding another way to screw me out of fantasy points next week.	Counting missed FGs, trying to wake up from his nightmare. "The kick is up and ..."	Same thing Bengals kicker Shayne Graham is—rolling in the money they bet on the Jets.

Big Z the boxer?

Luis Arroyave
FOR REDEYE

Cubs pitcher and three-time All-Star Carlos Zambrano said he has big plans for his recently-launched Big Z Foundation, which assists underserved families in Chicago and developing countries.

How big?

"Next year, we'd like to have George Lopez and Jim Carrey here," Zambrano said during the Big Z Foundation launch party Sunday at Fogo de Chao. "George Lopez couldn't make it [this time], but he told me he'll probably be here next time. Jim Carrey is my favorite actor. My friend who knows him told him I want to meet him and do stuff with him.

"I'm the kind of guy that when I do something, I like to do them big."

Zambrano, 28, wanted his charity to focus on underserved families because he once was in their shoes while growing up in Venezuela.

"I used to be a guy who didn't have too much to eat or a toy to play with," he said.

Zambrano normally spends the offseason in Venezuela but chose to stay in Chicago, for the most part, this time around because he didn't want to take his children out of school. He took up boxing for two weeks during his time off and said he hopes to continue with the training.

So is there boxing in the future for the 6-foot-5 Zambrano?

"Nah, I'm too slow for that," said Zambrano, whose favorite boxer is Evander Holyfield. "I used to box when I was 13, 14 years old. One time somebody hit me in the nose, and I said 'That's enough. This isn't for me.'"

Kane

The good fight

Patrick Kane had a ringside seat on the Blackhawks' bench as teammate Kris Versteeg threw haymaker after haymaker during a fight against Patrick Eaves in Sunday's game against the Red Wings.

Earlier this month, Kane was a spectator as Jonathan Toews exchanged punches with the Blues' David Backes at center ice. For Versteeg and Toews—neither of whom are exactly heavyweights—those were the second fights of their NHL careers.

So when does Kane, roughly in their same weight class, drop the gloves for the first time?

"I'm wondering that too," said Kane, in his third season. "Some of these things you can feel coming along. It's just a matter of time when it's the right situation.

ROAD TRIP

The 15-day trip is the Hawks' longest of the year but despite all that time on the road together, players don't expect to get too sick of each other. "Not really with this team," forward Patrick Sharp said. "With other teams we've gotten at each other's throats, and the wrestling matches we've had on the road turned a little serious sometimes. This team seems to be pretty close together and we like being together on the road."

"It will probably be a scrum around the net. It's not something I'm really looking for, to be honest. If it happens, it happens."

Listening in from the next dressing room stall, veteran Andrew Ladd had some sage advice: "Grab a goalie."

» Maria Sharapova tumbled out of the Australian Open on Monday in her worst performance at a Grand Slam event since 2003, falling 7-6 (4), 3-6, 6-4 to Maria Kirilenko in the first round.

» The White Sox and reliever Tony Pena agreed to a one-year, $1.2 million contract Monday, leaving left-hander John Danks as the Sox's only unsigned arbitration-eligible player. Pena, 28, was 1-2 with a 3.75 ERA in 35 relief appearances with the Sox.

Golden State 114, Bulls 97

The Bulls were missing Kirk Hinrich, out with the flu. The Warriors were missing most of their roster. Still, with only eight players dressing, Golden State waltzed away with a 114-97 victory Monday at Oracle Arena. John Salmons' 25 points led the Bulls.

Lower Back Pain?

Are You or Someone You Know Suffering From Lower Back Pain?

Northwestern University is seeking volunteers who have lower back pain in order to determine where the pain is recognized in the brain. Participants will also be evaluated to determine why pain goes away for some people while it remains for others. This is a 12 month study consisting of 1 visit at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago and 5 MRI scans at Northwestern Memorial Hospital's Olson Pavilion. All visits will take place in downtown Chicago.

Eligible participants must:

- Be 18 years or older
- Have a history of lower back pain which began 4-16 weeks ago with pain radiating into the buttocks or legs
- Be able to undergo a MRI (no pacemakers, metallic implants, or spinal implants)

Please call 312-238-0727 for more information on how you can take part in this research study.

TOUGH TALK

'Idol' judge Kara DioGuardi won't be this year's Paula Abdul

Chicago Tribune

There were times last year when Kara DioGuardi felt as though she had her pants on the ground.

Yes, there was the bikini incident where the then-new "American Idol" judge finished a song alongside Bikini Girl and pulled open her dress to reveal her own two-piece swimsuit (and perfectly toned torso).

But where the 39-year-old songwriter really felt exposed was being up there week after week in front of the contestants, the thousands of audience members and the tens of millions watching on TV.

"I never was in front of the camera" before "Idol," she says. "That was very difficult to go from the back of the studio to in front of 30 million people. I wish people had been a bit easier on me for that, because it's really scary when you're just kind of sitting right there and having all eyes on you and being judged."

She said she's stopped reading Internet comments but learned last year that "the younger people seemed to have a lot more of a problem with me. I just feel like my personality at times didn't always come through. Like, I'm way more feisty, but I can be fun and maybe I took myself a little seriously at times. I was just, you know, not good TV to them."

That's a feeling you'd think might lead to more sympathy for the contestants, but DioGuardi says she won't be taking over the role played by Paula Abdul.

If anything, DioGuardi said, she's feeling more comfortable and might be tougher this year on the Fox show's would-be singers (the third episode of the new season, based on Chicago auditions, airs 7 p.m. Tuesday, Fox).

"I may push it to be even more critical just because I think the stakes are even higher in the music business these days," she says. "I'm not trying to hurt anyone. I'm trying to help them and tell them, 'Look, you've got to stand out.'"

Comedian Ellen DeGeneres has joined the judging panel. And although none of the DeGeneres shows have aired yet, DioGuardi said she's been impressed.

"Idol" was taping Hollywood Week last week, which winnows the regional winners down to a set of finalists, and DeGeneres "is doing a phenomenal job," DioGuardi said. "She's funny. She's critical at times. She comments on things that are very specific to the music or the way they've changed the melody or their performance. I think people are going to be so impressed by her."

Cowell reportedly talking to Abdul about 'X Factor'

Simon Cowell is talking to familiar faces to sit beside him at the judges' table on Fox's "The X Factor."

Cowell is in discussions with his former "American Idol" co-star Paula Abdul and his current "X Factor" U.K. co-star Cheryl Cole for judging positions on the show, which launches on Fox in fall 2011, according to the Hollywood Reporter. Hiring Abdul and Cole would assure a certain degree of comfort between Cowell and other judges on the new series. Abdul in particular would allow Cowell to reform the heart of the longtime "Idol" judging team, which was split when Abdul quit the show in August.

The judges on "X Factor" are more crucial to the success of the show than on "Idol" because each mentors a group of singers and effectively becomes part of the competition. Cowell has said he "adores" Abdul and shares a camaraderie with Cole on the U.K. version of the show.

Jim Parsons
GETTY IMAGES FILE

Learning to speak geek

Newsday

If there is one breakthrough TV role over the past year or so, it is Jim Parsons' turn as physicist Sheldon Cooper in the hit CBS sitcom "The Big Bang Theory." Brilliant, supercilious, socially clueless, Cooper is alternately hysterical and horrifying. And Parsons' Emmy-nominated performance is so spot-on, it seems as if the character and the actor are the same person. But unlike Sheldon, the 36-year-old Parsons actually is a sports fan who does not speak Klingon.

What did you think about the part when you first read for it?

As a character, I don't know I felt a relation at all. What I had a feeling about was the way the dialogue was structured, the way they had structured Sheldon's speeches. Sheldon has always taken that many words to get to a point. I thought, and I still think, they brilliantly use those words that most of us don't recognize to create that rhythm. And the rhythm got me. It was the chance to dance through that dialogue, and in a lot of ways still is.

You're so identified with the character right now, are you worried at all that you'll be type-cast in the future?

No. ... I see the "problem" that it could pose for me. But I say no because I don't really have a choice at the end of the day. I feel like I throw myself no more or no less into this role than I have in anything else. I feel like, as an actor, should I be pulling back on how much I give to this character? Should I soften his edges so I don't make the same impression? That's the only thing I can do, and that's an impossibility.

What were your influences growing up?

I was very interested in sitcoms. I remember watching "Three's Company" a lot. And I was really formed by "Family Ties," "The Cosby Show." As far as movies went, my parents took me to "Star Wars."

When did you realize you could make it as an actor?

I did a play in high school, "Noises Off." It's a farce, and it was the first time I felt the most honest connection to a character and a play. It was the first time I felt like an honest-to-God actor. I thought it was going to be horrible, and I'm still astounded at the reaction we got. I realized it was something I was good at.

Sheldon is kind of the ultimate geek.

In what ways are you geeky?

I like words, and I like numbers. I like crossword puzzles a lot. I like to deal with lists and rankings and statistics. I'm surprised I'm not more into baseball, because I could geek on that. I love Casey Kasem's Top 40; I love that order. I love seeing what were the nominated Oscar films.

Chris Colfer in 'Glee'
FOX

GLEE! KURT GETS LUCKY

"Glee" head honcho Ryan Murphy has tipped ew.com and other media outlets on what is coming up in the second season this fall. He says Jennifer Lopez is in talks to play a cafeteria worker. Squee! Also, Kurt is going to get a boyfriend, and the actor filling that role will be found through nationwide auditions. "We're not going to do the whole hiding-in-the-shadows thing," he said of the relationship. "We're going to make them popular, and out and proud and glamorous. Like prom king and king."

Monitoring 'Hall'

Jenna Fischer is reportedly in negotiations to play Owen Wilson's wife in the Farrelly brothers' movie "Hall Pass." In the movie, Wilson's character's wife gives her husband a free ticket to get it on with others, according to hollywoodreporter.com.

What's N'avi for 'arrogant'?

James Cameron isn't interested in directing that piddly "Spider-Man" movie. Speaking with MTV at the Critics' Choice Awards on Friday, the "Avatar" director denied rumors that he is in the running to kick off a new franchise for the superhero. "It's a little bit sloppy seconds, let's face it," he said.

Keeping the heat on

Susan Boyle is gearing up for another big year in 2010. She taped a performance of "Who I Was Born To Be" for Tuesday's "Oprah Winfrey Show." It's been a year since Boyle was thrust into the international spotlight, and she talked with Oprah about her whirlwind success.

Used bag: $999,999

Anyone who hopes to snag the "Tonight Show With Conan O'Brien" carry-on bag that O'Brien posted on eBay last week has some steep competition: $999,999. The bid appears to be fake, according to bloggers. Bidding for the bag, a Victorinox Mobilizer described as a "legacy of both Swiss innovation and a 7-month-run of a late night institution," started at $399.99.

GOLDEN GROPINGS

Sunday's Golden Globes may have been about celebrating achievements in the performing arts, but the after-parties teemed with hot—or head-scratching—couples.

BUSTIN' OUT

Kate Bosworth (left) and Alexander Skarsgard. The "True Blood" hottie has been claiming singledom. His wandering hands say otherwise.

BEAMING

Drew Barrymore and Justin Long. She carried her award; he carried her umbrella.

BUT, WHY?

January Jones and Jeremy Piven. The two seemed to hit it off at the HBO party.

BURNING UP

David Duchovny and Tea Leoni. It looks as though someone's been forgiven for his sexcapades.

BLECH!

Jennifer Aniston and Gerard Butler. Getting burned by Brad seems to have ruined her taste in men. But perhaps the co-stars were just hanging out in a friendly way at the party. Maybe?

HOT DATE

JANUARY 29

That's when Bronzeville shoe store owner Nicole Jones will appear on ABC's "Shark Tank" to try to raise money for a new venture.
